It has many goals, the most important of which is to promote students' personal and intellectual growth through poetry. Furthermore, the students are required to be trained to have the experience of thoughtful reading of English poems and criticizing and evaluating them as well. The poems herein form a collection of English poetry that is eclectic (diverse) from every point of view. These poems range from early to contemporary, from well-known to less known, from easily accessible to highly challenging, from traditional to non-traditional. These poems also express attitudes from extroverted to introspective. Furthermore, the text of English poetry is fully multicultural, with many poems by women and minorities enhancing the students' knowledge and expanding the canon of English poetry previous taught in high schools, freshman, or sophomore years. Most students have a natural respect for and interest in poetry. Students have the innate capacity to enjoy techniques of poetic language – rhythm, rhyme, image, alliteration, or metaphor. If properly encouraged, most students would love trying their hand at writing verse. This course also emphasizes the feedbacks from your peers and personal reflections after reading and discussing the poems.
