Objectives	The reading process is a complicated act the involves the following processes: a decoding process, a visual process, a thinking process, a psycholinguistic process, a metacognitive process, and a technological process. Merely sounding out words is not reading. The curriculum of English reading for sophomores covers, first, the structure of a standard essay, such as the opening paragraph with topic sentence, supporting paragraphs, and the conclusion paragraph. Later, "vocabulary development" will be introduced, including "word relations", such as prefix, suffix, word roots, synonyms, antonyms, associations, homonyms/homophones, homographs, classifications, multiple meanings, and denotative-connotative meanings. In addition, authentic reading materials selected from novels, personal experiences, editorials, commercial, scientific reading materials, as well as newspaper, magazines, and articles will be covered. Furthermore, language learning strategies and academic power strategies will be integrated in this course.
